Hair Salon

Chris Maddox has two beautiful, artsy little girls who love to play dress up. Their adoring dad often plays along, but he seldom gets to style their hair into fabulous, make-believe do's. "Oh, they usually put on their princess wigs," Chris laughs.

But that's the under-6 set. The rest of us would never consider dressing for the ball—or the office, or anywhere—without first allowing someone from Christopher Ashley Salon to work a little real-life magic on our tresses.

"It's not just a haircut—it's about feeling beautiful," Chris says. "The experience of having a stylist who sees your hair more like a tailor or an artist with a blank canvas is immeasurable, especially when you wear it for 6 weeks."

Chris learned his craft during a two-year apprenticeship under a renowned French hairdresser, and over the past two decades he's never stopped enhancing his skills. The team travels several times a year to New York for training to keep the salon fresh and innovative. Christopher Ashley's specialty is balayage, a French technique where highlights are freehand painted through the hair for a flowing, natural look.

The "Ashley" in the salon's name is Christopher's wife, who worked there prior to becoming a full-time mom.
